

Author(s) should submit a Preface - including the structure of the book, the intended audience, and a detailed introduction to the subject with an up-to-date perspective on the topic, a Table of Contents, and two or more sample chapters.

Moreover, authors may want to provide a short cover letter outlining the added value of the present manuscript with respect to the existing literature, and/or pointing out whether the approach and the issues addressed are new.

If the manuscript is on a subject for which classical books already exist, authors should explain what is new about the manuscript (e.g., pedagogical aspects, contemporary exposition, original points of view, etc.).

Original papers that are too long to be published in a research journal should include an introduction to the subject presenting the context of the work, the state-of-the-art, and challenges and open problems. The paper's main contributions must also be clearly stated.
