AIDS and Behavior

Special Issue: HIV in the South

Guest Editors: Kirk D. Henny and William L. Jeffries IV

Editor-in-Chief: Seth C. Kalichman

AIDS and Behavior is soliciting manuscript submissions to be considered for a special issue focused on HIV infection in the southeastern United States (the South). In 2017, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention held a town hall meeting with public health leaders from the South to discuss prevention activities, partnerships, and collaborations that can address the disproportionately high HIV infection rates in this region. To expound on these topics, this special issue will include articles that address one of the following thematic tracks related to HIV in the South:

- Epidemiology and context of HIV infection
- Programmatic responses and challenges
- Partnerships and collaboration

This special issue of AIDS and Behavior solicits manuscripts on any aspect regarding the aforementioned topics, including original empirical research, systematic reviews, policy analyses, descriptions of program development (including partnerships or collaborations), and program evaluation. Submissions from HIV prevention researchers and practitioners are especially encouraged.

Submissions should make explicit the thematic tracks addressed in the manuscript.

Please follow AIDS and Behavior’s Instructions for Authors and submit manuscripts to the journal’s Editorial Manager. When submitting a manuscript, include a cover letter stating your request for it to be considered for publication in this special issue and select “HIV in the South Special Issue” as the manuscript type.

Submission deadline: November 1, 2018
