Rationale for the edited collection:

Due to increasing international students and academic staff mobility in higher education, a new type of tourism known as “academic tourism” has emerged (Rodríguez, A., Martínez-Roget, F., Pawłowska, E., 2012; Bento, J., 2014). There is a growing interest in themes related to academic tourism within tourism, but this tourism type remains an under-researched topic. The present book addresses this gap and welcomes a wide range of chapters addressing academic tourism in the domain of tourism economics, regional development planning and business studies.

The editors seek contributions, in English, that attempt to address the following (but not limited to) topics:

- Academic tourism demand and expenditure
- Economic impacts of academic tourism
- Academic tourism and sustainable tourism planning
- Academic tourism and regional development
- Academic tourism and internationalisation of higher education
- Academic tourism and dynamics of tourism destinations

We welcome qualitative and quantitative methods and approaches to these chapters. Chapters may be research-based, case studies, exploratory or critical literature reviews and conceptual / theoretical analysis of academic tourism in contemporary tourism.
